DIAMOND

The harsh realities of modern corporate life motivated Jwalant to begin an Amway™ business.

“Experience is the best teacher — as long as it’s somebody else’s experience,” Jwalant said. He worried about his job at a major wireless corporation after his supervisor was let go.

He’d been introduced to Amway as a student, but realizing that his company offered no real security, he thought: “You know what? I’d better look into it again.”

Asha wanted to make a little money on the side. “I saw doctors, lawyers, and engineers as IBOs. If all these professional people were working at this opportunity, then why not me?”

And now, as new Diamonds, Jwalant and Asha are proud of the path they chose. “We’re not overnight wonders,” Asha said. “What changed in the last couple of years is that we really got serious.”

For Jwalant, setting priorities was key. “We may have missed some dinners, some parties. But we did it so we would have more freedom to set our own schedules.” And he was determined to succeed. “I have a bulldog attitude. No matter what, we were going to make it happen.”

Their success has given them more financial security. For Asha, that means “not having to pick and choose which bills to pay.” It also allows them to spend more time together and with their three children.

Motivating downline IBOs is a priority, and they enjoy it. “If we can do it, anybody can,” Jwalant said. “If people need help, the team is there, because that’s how this business works. We help other people to succeed. It’s our success too.”

Giving people hope “is the most phenomenal feeling in the world,” Asha said. “When we sit across from someone who has lost that excitement and show them what life can be like, that’s the best thing.”

Their dream is to have a stress-free life. “We want to travel the world and have new experiences,” Jwalant said. “I’ve seen so many people have a phenomenal lifestyle. We can get there too.”

“No matter what, we were going to make it happen.”
